Dear Colleagues,

I am following up on the messages that you have received from Provost Goldberg and other UA administrators to provide you with some details on New Faculty Orientation on next Tuesday and Wednesday. You will be introduced to resources that will help you with your research and teaching—including updates on grants that are tailored to your individual interests, campus programs that can help you meet your students' math and writing needs, and resources to support your online and classroom instruction.

You will be able to talk with top leaders, including your dean, about a wide range of campus initiatives, including our recently earned standing as an Hispanic-Serving Institution. We have also arranged for you to have a chance to talk with HR professionals about your personnel benefits and programs ranging from childcare funding to programs to support your career advancement.

The program will include time for you to interact with colleagues facing some of the same challenges as you are in getting acclimated to Tucson and UA. The program will not include a lot of PowerPoint presentations on general information that you can find on the web. The full agenda is available online here.

RSVP so that we can seat you with faculty from your college:

I hope you can join us. If you have questions or concerns, please email me.
